2018-2019 ANNUAL REPORT

Dear Friends,

There is no singular face of hunger. It's the face of children, seniors and people going through life crises, like a job loss, physical injury or divorce. It's the face of young families, where both parents work but still don't earn enough to take care of a baby and pay the bills. Food insecure people come from every religious and racial background and from every corner of southeast Michigan to stand in food lines with others whose circumstances also led them to seek help.

And just as there is no singular face of hunger, there is no singular way to combat it. During the past fiscal year, we have turned over every stone to figure out how Forgotten Harvest can make the deepest possible impact on hunger and food insecurity. We have:

- Enhanced our ability to learn more about those we serve through the Link2Feed client intake tool that now includes 50,000 households; we're gaining a better understanding of where they are coming from and what they're going through to better inform how we deliver food
- Gathered feedback from our community partners about ways to improve logistics, working to get food to where it's needed most and in a timely manner that reduces wait time for those in need
- Optimized our internal controls and monitoring practices to help us reach our nutritional mix and variety goals weekly, monthly and yearly in order to better achieve our operational goals
- Rebooted our organizational culture, listening to some honest feedback from our staff members and using that information to make the organization better from within
- Began preparations for our new Forgotten Harvest Campus as the cornerstone of our bold transformation around how we distribute food in southeast Michigan (look for more announcements and details in the new year)

We're proud of our accomplishments and excited to share more about our impact. Please take time to read about how we serve the community through the voices of the many people who drive our mission – and thank you for your support.

FAMILY

ACROSS THE TRI-COUNTY AREA, FORGOTTEN HARVEST FEEDS THOUSANDS OF FAMILIES WHO HAVE LIMITED RESOURCES. SO LIMITED THAT EVEN THE MOST BASIC NECESSITY OF FOOD IS SOMETHING THEY WORRY ABOUT.

In December of 2018, Jasmine C., 32, moved from the west side of Detroit to the east side. She reported her move to her Bridge Card coordinator, but it took time before the records were updated and she started receiving benefits again at her new home. In the meantime, her family was running out of food.

Starting to feel desperate, in March of 2019 Jasmine went online, searched for food pantries in the area, and discovered a nearby Forgotten Harvest distribution at Matrix Human Services. She walked to the Matrix location on East McNichols Road in Detroit with a wheeled cart, since her car was broken down at the time.

"I went up there, stood in line, got a number," says Jasmine. "I prayed that it was worth it and it was." She started attending the mobile pantry every week.

Jasmine says her family benefits most from the fresh produce provided by Forgotten Harvest, which she uses for snacks, school lunches, and dinner side dishes, including fresh salads. She says that the nutritional value of the food is a big plus. Her children enjoy the vegetables and fruit and are disappointed if she misses a distribution day.

Without this food, Jasmine admits that her situation might be really bad. "There'd be less food, not enough to go around because there's so many of us."

Kelly B.'s family is one of those families with limited resources. During her two pregnancies, Kelly was too ill to work and needed to find food assistance that was close to home. She found out about the Forgotten Harvest mobile pantry offered at the Arab American and Chaldean Council's Youth Recreation and Leadership Center in Detroit and began attending monthly.

"Before Forgotten Harvest, I use to worry about not having enough food," says Kelly.

ACC and Forgotten Harvest have been food distribution partners since 2011. Each family who attends a mobile pantry distribution receives approximately 60 pounds of prepared and perishable foods.

As a young woman herself at just 22 years of age, Kelly has no parents and has been living on her own since she was 18. She and her fiancée are raising a one-year-old daughter and two-year-old son in their apartment on West Eight Mile Road. They both work, but even with Bridge Card benefits, there is still not enough to make ends meet, and they need other support.

"My Bridge Card funds were never enough," says Kelly. "Forgotten Harvest bridges the gap between my Bridge Card and makes it so I am not stressing about not having enough food." She has been attending Forgotten Harvest mobile pantry for about two years since her first child was born.

She appreciates the milk, yogurt and pasta from Forgotten Harvest. "Foods that make dinner are always helpful because you can have full meals and enough for leftovers."

AGENCY PARTNERSHIPS

COMMUNITY

FROM PONTIAC TO DETROIT, AGENCIES ADDRESS THE FOOD NEEDS OF TWO VULNERABLE POPULATIONS: SENIOR CITIZENS AND TEEN MOMS

Located in a former Office Max store in Pontiac, Oakland HOPE is one of Oakland County's newest emergency food pantries. The space was renovated to house a thrift store and client choice food pantry, which stocks food from Forgotten Harvest and other sources.

With client choice pantries, people browse like they would in a grocery store, selecting the foods they need, based on preference, dietary restrictions, or cultural or religious requirements.

Many seniors who attended the now-closed Waterford Senior Center come to Oakland HOPE for food support. According to Norma Okonski, founder and executive director, seniors are an overlooked population, who often make trade-offs between food and medications.

"It's a population that is needy, is prideful, doesn't want to ask for help because they've seen harder times than what they see now," says Norma. "They have so many roadblocks and impediments in front of them."

Twenty-five miles south of Pontiac in Detroit, volunteers at Central Detroit Christian (CDC) Community Development Corporation also see people with roadblocks. CDC receives a truckload of food from Forgotten Harvest once a month, and it's distributed immediately to around 100 individuals under the efficient management of a warm, friendly, joking crew of volunteers.

Despite their good nature, they fully understand the weight of their work and the importance of the Forgotten Harvest food for those who need it. One of the volunteers, Gloria Trammell, says, "If it wasn't for this, people wouldn't be able to survive."

The mobile pantry at CDC is visited by families, teen mothers from a nearby shelter, people who are transient, seniors, and anyone in need of food. "The impact of Forgotten Harvest is feeding a lot of people who don't have enough to buy groceries," says Gloria. "It helps the whole family – children and even grandmothers."

HUMANITY

KROGER DOES MORE TO ABATE HUNGER THAN SELLING GROCERIES

When Kroger launched its Zero Hunger|Zero Waste social impact plan in 2017, it basically doubled Kroger's giving toward hunger, according to Rachel Hurst, corporate affairs manager for The Kroger Company's Michigan Division.

The plan proposes to end hunger in Kroger communities and eliminate waste in the company by 2025. It's a bold goal and one that makes Forgotten Harvest a more integral component of the grocer's operating model than ever before.

Food-rescue volume tells the story well. Last year alone, Kroger had roughly five million pounds of food rescued in Michigan stores, and Forgotten Harvest rescued 4,207,298 pounds of the total that went directly back into the metro Detroit communities where it is needed most. They were a huge part of moving that food as Kroger's largest food bank partner in the state.

"When Forgotten Harvest goes to our stores, they're picking up food that would've been wasted that is still consumable," says Rachel. "So they're helping us drive our mission of zero food waste in our stores, while providing more meals. Their mission – really for all of our food bank partners – is directly aligned with what we do."

Rachel says that Forgotten Harvest is one of Kroger's more innovative food bank partners and is agile and quick to respond to change. Forgotten Harvest and Kroger have been working together since 2004.

"Forgotten Harvest is 100 percent aligned with our mission of Zero Hunger|Zero Waste. They are 100 percent focused on ending hunger and food insecurity, which is 100 percent our social impact and mission," says Rachel. "Partnering with them is vital to the success of ending hunger, because they're doing it every day. That is their focus. That is their goal."

Along with the food rescued from 90 Kroger stores across the state, last year Kroger donated more than $150,000 toward Forgotten Harvest operations.

PHILANTHROPY

EIGHT YEARS AGO, THE HELLERS DECIDED TO PUT THEIR CHARITABLE DOLLARS TOWARD FOOD ACCESS; THEIR LEARNING AND GIVING HASN'T STOPPED SINCE

When Matt Heller and his wife Katie reached a point in their lives where they had the financial means to support a nonprofit organization, they researched a variety of agencies. People not having enough food was an issue that pulled at them.

They liked what they learned about Forgotten Harvest rescuing food that would be thrown away and getting it to someone who really needs it. "It seemed like a group that not only had a mission that lined up with ours, but also had a way to run it and manage it so that our dollars have the most effect," says Matt.

"Knowing that school kids are having to worry about not only their math homework but where they're going to get food, that's really tough to hear."

"It's important for organizations like Forgotten Harvest to get food to those kids, so that they can go and do what is important: focus on school."

Harvest Circle donors, like Matt, provide over 60 percent of the funds needed for Forgotten Harvest's daily operation. They are folks who make cumulative annual donations of $1,000 or more.

As the owner of Central Screw Products, Matt also involves his employees in Forgotten Harvest's mission by volunteering. Matt believes that making more people aware of hunger issues can only lead to better things.
